

Bachelor of Arts in FILM

The film B.A. shares a cinema studies and production core with the film, B.F.A. program. Students can choose tailored plans of study for key specializations in cinematography, post-production, sound design, production management, production design, and more. The capstone experience enables students to train and work as key creative collaborators on film productions. They also learn about the professional practice to help better prepare themselves for life after film school, navigating a career in the industry. The program offers courses in film theory, history and criticism in the first two years. In the second two years, the program concentrates on the analysis of specific film practices such as editing, color, sound, staging, cinematography, narrative form and theoretical and historical perspectives.

Bachelor of Fine Arts in FILM

The film B.F.A. enables students to design a plan of study for different modalities in narrative, documentary and experimental filmmaking, as well as screenwriting. Students choose their own path of interest with tailored plans of study for key specializations in directing, producing, screenwriting, cinematography, post-production, sound design, production design, production management, and more. The program focuses on film production and provides students with a foundation in history, theory and aesthetics of film while developing their individual production skills, style and voice as entrepreneurial cinematic storytellers. The program involves the student in the technical, economic and artistic processes of film and encourages creative exploration of the medium and its potential. Students are guided through the process of submitting their work to film festivals and many students have received recognition and awards through these screenings.
